Halal Logo Use Policy

The UHA logo is the intellectual property of Universal Halal Authority and may only be used by organisations that have been formally certified by UHA. All certificates, reports and official documents issued by UHA remain its property and must not be altered or misrepresented. Clients may make internal copies, and duplicate certificates may be requested for external use.

Certified organisations may use the UHA logo only within the exact scope of their certification. Where the entire product range and all relevant sites have been certified, the logo may be used on communication materials such as websites, stationery, marketing content and company vehicles. Where only specific products or production lines are certified, the logo may appear only on the packaging and promotional materials of those certified products. The logo must always be reproduced clearly, without alteration, distortion or misuse, and written permission is required for use in media or advertising campaigns.

The halal certification mark must not be used on uncertified products or facilities, nor in any misleading or deceptive manner. It must not be used after suspension, withdrawal or expiry of certification, and it must not be used in any way that harms the reputation or impartiality of UHA or suggests endorsement beyond the certified scope.

The right to use the UHA logo is automatically withdrawn if certification is suspended, withdrawn or expired. Clients must immediately stop using the mark and remove it from all products, packaging, websites and promotional materials. Continued use after withdrawal may result in enforcement action.

This policy ensures that the UHA certification mark is used responsibly and accurately, protecting the integrity of halal certification and the trust of consumers and stakeholders.
